BEHIND THE CURVES

■ There's only one thing the art world likes better than attractive, young female artists: attractive, young female artists obsessed with sex. Cecily Brown's thick 'n' sticky paintings of writhing flesh, Sue Williams' suggestive abstract expressionism, Sam Taylor-Wood's photographic series of a bored, orgiastic elite—all have been making the critics and the collectors swoon. But the undeniable soror in charge is a thirty-seven-year-old truck driver's daughter from Philadelphia named Lisa Yuskavage. Her first solo museum exhibition, opening this month at the Institute of Contemporary Art in her hometown, includes some large-scale paintings never before shown publicly in the United States. An oil painter of cartoonishly voluptuous nymphets—most half-hidden in hair and pastel mist, looking delicately, depressingly ravaged—Yuskavage is an artist who is just as likely to be found studying back issues of Penthouse as the rococo work of eighteenth-century French painter Jean-Honoré Fragonard. The way she sees it, the magazine's softcore porn spreads, with their diffuse lighting, are very much like the work of Vermeer: lush, stimulating, with a view to an intimate world. —ALBERT LEE
